The narrator is a young Afro-Cuban girl who, when her mother passes away, must live with her aunt and cousins. Her life is often miserable as she endures racial prejudice and mistreatment from those around her. To keep her mother's memory alive, and to remember that she was once unconditionally loved, she composes letters to her "Mami", confiding her personal suffering and emotions; the novel is composed of these letters. While the narrator is only 10 years old at the start of the story, the thematic elements and non-explicit descriptions of sexual encounters make this story better suited to an older audience. This novel was attacked in some quarters for exposing the issue of racism within contemporary Cuban society, but it went on to win major awards.
